Exploratory Studies at SNHU

Don't know what you want to study yet? Don't worry. You don't have to declare a major right away. There are many academic programs to explore at Southern New Hampshire University, and there is time to investigate them before declaring a major.

You're not alone – nationally, 50 percent of college students change their majors at some point in their academic careers. Many change them more than once. SNHU's exploratory studies program provides the time, support and information needed to make an educated decision when you are ready to declare a major. The program is a fully integrated, fundamental component of our campus.

Go learn

All first-year students are required to take SNHU 101 Scholarship for Success, designed to help you transition to university academics and campus life and master essential skills for success. It also opens the door to new and varied areas of study. You will have flexibility and be able to choose courses from across disciplines when building your schedule for the first few semesters.

Go explore your interests and passions

Exploratory studies students are advised through the Office of Academic Advising – insightful advising is a cornerstone of the program. You will meet early and regularly with your academic advisors and with faculty members from different disciplines, who will help you explore your interests.

Go get ready

Another aspect of the program is the full range of support and services available through the Career Development Center. Complete a career assessment inventory, register for an internship and meet individually with the staff. Don't just learn about something – experience it.

When you are ready, you can choose from more than 40 majors, including:
