Go Beyond Criminology and the Law

Master of Science in Justice Studies

SNHU's online MS in Justice Studies provides military students with the skills to analyze and critique operational and public policy from social, administrative, juridical, philosophical and managerial perspectives. No GMAT or GRE are required.

The MS Justice Studies online program provides a comprehensive examination of a field that goes far beyond criminology and the law. Because of this broad-based learning experience, students gain a deeper understanding of the relationship between justice-related disciplines and the many military and post-military career choices available with a Master's degree in Justice Studies. Graduates of the SNHU MS in Justice Studies program leave with:

- The ability to apply legal and justice research strategies and techniques to real-world challenges
- An appreciation for the complexities of the criminal justice and legal systems
- An understanding of the role that morality and ethical reasoning play in the American legal system
- Effective written communication skills
- Available concentrations in Terrorism and Homeland Security and Cyber-Security

SNHU Benefits
